

What a reader meets after the verdict

The result page, what to do right now, and the nine packs. This is the plan that was built, the reasoning behind each move, and what is still open.

01 The challenge, stated plainly

Everything before the verdict was designed for somebody who is deciding. Everything after it was designed for somebody who is reading. Those are not the same person. A reader who has just been told not to send money has minutes of attention and, if money has already gone, hours of window. The back half asked them to read.

WHAT IT DID

A page headed Do this right now opened with a title, a lead sentence, a red door, a kicker, a headline, a paragraph, a reassurance box and three time cards. The first instruction appeared on the second screenful. Nine packs each opened with a form: nine blank ruled lines for the reader's own name, amounts and account details. Two phone numbers were labelled Canada and United States, naming a country rather than whoever picks up. A third read Your bank: the number on your card, which at least one reader took as a request for their card number.

02 The three rules this plan runs on

The first thing on a screen is the first thing to do

Not the title of the screen, not the caveat, not the door. If the page is called Do this right now, the first thing under the title is the thing to do.

An emergency is written only for somebody who has one

A reader weighing up a firm with nothing against it must not be handed a recovery route. Offering one insinuates a loss nobody has reported. The run decides which reader this is; the page never guesses.

We carry the record; the reader carries their own story

The part a fraud desk cannot get from the reader is the record: what was found, who published it, and the day it was read. That is what a pack is for. Everything the reader already knows, they already know, and asking them to write it onto a page we handed them is asking them to do our work.

03 The result page, reordered

IN ORDER

WHY IT SITS THERE

The verdict

Unchanged. The one line that has to survive being read badly, on a small screen, at eleven at night.

What we found

A half width way in, directly under the verdict, because it is the question a reader asks the second they are told not to send money. It opens a sheet over the page, scrolls on its own, and closes back to the sentence they were on. Under it, the records pushed the verdict off the top of the screen and left them scrolling to find their way back.

What came back in their favour

The registers, full width, where they were.

What we could not answer

Moved down from beside the verdict. Read here it is the honest edge of what they have just seen, rather than the size of a hole shown to somebody who has not seen a single record.

Do this right now

Full width, last, the only thing below the grey box. Nothing sits under it, because a reader who takes that step never comes back up.

Two widths on the page, not five: the way in and the grey box share one measure, derived from the hero column so they hold together at every breakpoint. The action runs the full width under them.

On a phone, once the reader passes the first screenful, the next action rides with them at the foot of the screen, and stands down whenever the real door is on screen. The same thing is never offered twice at once.

04 What to do right now, rebuilt

The screen now has three states, and the run decides which one, never the page.

THE READER

WHAT THE TOP OF THE SCREEN SAYS

Money has gone

Ring your bank now. Three numbered lines, above every door and menu on the screen. Ring your bank, the number is on the back of your bank card. Say the words fraud claim, not disputed purchase, and get a claim number. Stop everything else leaving.

Nothing sent, adverse record

Send nothing to this party. Three lines: send nothing, ask them in writing which regulator they are registered with, look that answer up yourself on the regulator's own register rather than a link they send.

Nothing sent, nothing against them

Nothing. No block, no recovery route, no urgency. The three menus are there for whoever wants them.

Everything that used to crowd the top is still on the screen, below those three lines: the recovery window, what the call will ask for, who to reach out to, and the checks that catch most of it. Nothing was deleted. It was put in the order a frightened person can use.

05 Every number names who answers

WAS

IS

Canada · 1-888-495-8501

Canadian Anti-Fraud Centre, Canada · 1-888-495-8501

United States · 1-877-382-4357

Federal Trade Commission, United States · 1-877-382-4357

Your bank · The number on your card

Your own bank · Look on the back of your bank card and ring the number printed there. Never read your card number out to anybody who rang you.

The bank sits first, because the bank is the only body on the list that can move money. The build now fails if any number is labelled with a country rather than the body that picks up.

06 The nine packs, as report cards

Each pack is now four sections and nothing else.

SECTION

WHAT IS IN IT

What the records say about this	Every record found, the body that published it, and the day it was read. Against and in favour are told apart by a rule on the left edge as well as its colour, because this file gets printed, faxed and photocopied before anybody reads it.
---------------------------------	--

What the record holds	The party, the website, the registers, the dates, the reference.
-----------------------	--

How to reach them	Who answers, in which country, and on what number, with the timing that body publishes.
-------------------	---

What to put in the message	Four lines. Attach the pack. Quote the reference. Say what happened in your own words. One thing worth knowing for this particular body.
----------------------------	--

The blank form is gone from the preview and from the downloadable file, and the build fails if either comes back.

07 How this is held

GUARD	STATE	WHAT IT PROTECTS
verify.mjs	SHIPPED	The result page order, the sheet being a modal, the instruction block depending on the run's stage, every number naming a body, the packs carrying no form.
smoke40.mjs	SHIPPED	Walks all three reader states and all nine packs in a browser, and renders a clean payload to confirm a firm with nothing against it is never handed an emergency.
smoke26, smoke39	SHIPPED	The walk between screens, the sheet opening and closing without moving the page behind it, focus returning to the control that opened it.
uxgate.mjs	SHIPPED	Contrast, target size, names, focus rings and overflow at 1440, 390 and 320. The report page went from fourteen undersized targets to one; the ceiling was lowered to hold it.

08 What is still open

ITEM	STATE	NOTE
Nobody has used it untutored	OPEN	Every judgement in this plan is reasoned, not observed. Five people who have actually lost money, given the page and watched, would settle more than another pass of ours.
The clean path in the wild	OPEN	No demo specimen returns a clean verdict, so the no-alarm property is held by a constructed payload. A live clean run should be walked before launch.
The bank's own number	OPEN	We deliberately print no bank phone number. The safe number is the one on the card in their hand. Worth confirming with counsel that this is the position we want in writing.
